LITTLE GIRLS' BASKETRY CLASS AT DENISON HOUSE.

The Work of Wellesley Chapter of C. S. A.

The work of the College Settlement Association has spread and gained in powers, since 1890; it was perhaps never more full of vitality than at present. The reports from the three settlement houses in New York, Philadelphia and Boston show that each year they gain more influence in their neighborhoods and have more opportunities to help the cause of higher social life.

The Wellesley Chapter of the College Settlement Association has always held a prominent position in the Association. Its aim is a higher one,—to send money to help support the three settlement houses, to organize the philanthropic effort of the college community, and to make this effort an intelligent social service. Wellesley has always been particularly fortunate in having a sense of close relationship with the Denison House, Boston. Ever since Denison House opened its doors in December, 1892, Miss Dudley has welcomed our girls as assistants in entertaining the various clubs and in a great many other ways has made our organization stronger. This connection with Denison House has kept alive in the college an active interest in Settlement work which could not have been gained in any other way. On the other hand, Miss Dudley writes: "We could hardly face the demands involved in our Christmas parties were it not for the dolls and money which the Wellesley Chapter sends for this purpose. It is a pity that those who have put so much work into these gifts should not have the pleasure of seeing the radiant joy with which they are received. Two or three members of the Wellesley Chapter have come in every Friday afternoon to help with the large game parties for the little children and we cannot forget the kindness with which they entertained three of our club picnics at the college last spring. The Wellesley Chapter supplies us with an entertainment for one of our Thursday evening parties every month during the year."

Last Thursday night, October 19th, Wellesley sent in her first entertainment for this year. Before the "neighbors" had gathered for the evening Miss Dudley showed us over the New House, next door. This new house fills a long felt want. Anyone simply reading over the list of classes and clubs carried on every day at Denison House will realize that the two little houses have been quite too small to accommodate them. But now, with the new house, new club rooms have been opened, and also a fine carpenter shop and the most complete cooking school and laundry room imaginable.

Denison House has worked hard and spent a great deal of money and time in fitting up the house, but there is yet much to be done. The big living room down stairs has no furniture but its fireplace and piano. Chairs, tables and pictures are needed; about seventy-five dollars would cover the expense, and the appeal is made to Wellesley to help furnish the room. The need is very real, and if we respond, we shall be doing something really worth while.

On Saturday afternoon, October 28th, all Wellesley students interested in Settlement work are most cordially invited to go to Denison House, 93 Tyler street, to hear a discussion of "What is the duty of the College Settlements Association towards the Colleges," and to visit the new house and see some of the classes in operation. It is an unusual opportunity and it is earnestly hoped that a great many from the college will take advantage of it.

The Settlements Association: Its Meaning.

The chapter of the C. S. A. ought to be the social conscience of the college. The duty of a member is not done when she has paid her fee, dressed a doll, and helped entertain at Denison House of a Thursday evening. Oh no! When she enters this dignified Association with branches in all the great woman's colleges of the East, she joins a great fellowship. It is a fellowship of educated women pledged to the promotion of an intelligent and earnest interest in social questions. The bond, to many older people, is a strength and inspiration: even to College girls, it should be at least as real and deep as the bond of College society or class.

Not that the pledge need mean much time: it means an attitude. It means the alert mind: the imagination quick to feel the romance, the appeal, of the social movement: the conscience, trained to sensitiveness to social need. And it means that the Chapter as a whole is bound to promote this attitude in the College. In our fascinating miniature world, how easy to forget that greater drama without,—passionate, unbending, to-day at crucial point,—in which all students are soon to be called to play their part, with whatso high sincerity their years of preparation have given! Was not this amazing forgetfulness of ours illustrated last year in the fiasco of the pro-Russian movement? Quite apart from the difficult question of right action in that case, it was mortifying to perceive that no action at all was feasible, simply because, among our thousand students, a scant minority had even been alive to the thrilling Russian situation. As Miss Coman then well said to us, the indifference of American students to social reform is in striking contrast to the eagerness of students in the universities of Europe. Jack London has been saying the same thing of late, in stinging words, to the University of California; perhaps his Intercollegiate Socialist Society will come to Wellesley some day, and stir us up.

The Work of Wellesley Chapter of C. S. A.

Now the College Settlement movement was started with the express purpose of making connections between the academic world and the reform movement The partial maintenance of three houses, among the large number of settlements established since the Association was founded, is only one detail in our aim. These houses are simply a visible expression of what we mean,—a recognition of responsibility on the part of our world of the high intellectual and social privilege, toward that great field where the battle of a Christian civlization is being fiercely waged, with uncertain outcome.

The C. S. A., in a word, exists to two ends: service and enlightenment. The first, the Wellesley chapter well fulfils. Its large membership, generous response to appeals for hospitality, or such practical help as the settlement deems wise to ask from undergraduates, make it a model which the officers of the Association hold up to other chapters. But when it comes to enlightenment, one can not help fearing that it means little, to its own members or to the College. Certainly, it means less than it used to. What can we do about it? Can not suggestions be offered through the columns of THE NEWS? The writer has a dozen on the tip of her pen: but her space is filled.

On Wednesday, October 18, the College had some interesting British visitors. They were Sir John and Lady Leng from Newport, near Dundee. Sir John and Lady Leng are very much interested in educational problems and came here, in part, to compare the American women's colleges with those of England, which they know well. They were much pleased and impressed with what they saw in Wellesley. Being particularly interested in organs and chimes, at their request, they were taken to Billings Hall where Professor Macdougall played for them on the new organ.

The History Club which was started last spring has been reorganized on a more definite plan. The club is now open to all graduate students in history, and to Juniors and Seniors taking a nine-hour major. There will be six meetings during the year, at which some lecturer from outside the college, or a member of the Faculty will talk. No work is required of undergraduates. The officers elected are as follows:
President.....Caroline W. Dayton, '06
Vice-President.....Miss Kendall
Secretary and Treasurer.....Rhoda Todd, '06

OUR EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

The earliest of the antiquities recently presented to the College by the Egypt Exploration Fund Committee and now exhibited in the Art Building, come from the tombs of courtiers and officials buried about the mortuary temple of Mentuhetep Nebkherura, greatest king of the XIth dynasty. He reigned at Thebes in Upper Egypt at a date placed conservatively near 2200 B. C. His temple was discovered two years ago at Deir el Bahari against the face of the cliffs that border the Nile valley on the west, across the river from Luxor, the ancient Thebes.

Among the objects belonging to the XIth dynasty now here the most interesting are wooden boatmen, oars, spars and various fragments from small model boats. Fully rigged and manned, the Egyptians copied in miniature the boat that had borne the mummy of the dead man across the Nile to his new home. They represented, too, perhaps, the vessel in which his soul made its long voyage to the isles of the departed. Hidden in the soil of a rainless country, these little wooden boatmen have escaped decay and even retained the garments, black wigs and staring eyes painted on them four thousand years and more ago.

A cloth from the wrappings of a mummy, vase stands and a funerary vase of baked clay, with a wooden model of such a vase, complete the tale of objects from the XIth dynasty.

Early in the fifteenth century, B. C., Queen Hatshepsut of the XVIIIth dynasty built close beside the old temple of Nebkherura a great temple to Ammon. Many small offerings dedicated here, by pious of this and later generations under thee XVIIIth dynasty (which continued to about 1300 B.C.) were ultimately swept out to a dust heap beside the temple; from this are fragments of blue glaze vases, rings, scarabs, votive ears and eyes and tiny reliefs of cows, all of blue glaze with a very roughly modeled cow of terra cotta. These were offered to the Goddess Hathor who had a chapel in the temple. The cow was sacred to her.

Under the XVIIIth dynasty also divers objects of ordinary use were left here by workmen—a rush sandal, a wooden mallet, wedge and lever and a basket—thirty-three centuries ago.

A small alabaster jar belonging to the same time comes from a cemetery near the ancient Herakleopolis in Middle Egypt (west of the Nile about seventy miles south of Cairo). This jar held the kohl with which an ancient Egyptian lady pencilled her eyes even as her successors do to-day.

In Herakleopolis itself (modern Ehnasya) in the Temple of Hershef, the ram-headed god whom the Greeks identified with Herakles, was found the heavy limestone block on which is cut in sunken relief, common in his time, a figure of Rameses II, seated, receiving offerings, which are laid upon a table before him. His name is cut within a cartouche behind the throne. He is the great Rameses (reigning about 1324-1258 B. C.) the Sesostris of the Greeks, most celebrated of all the Pharaohs, often identified as that "king who knew not Joseph," and oppressed the Israelites.

Four small glazed figures of the sixth century B. C. and two granite offering tables of Roman times come also from the Temple at Ehnasya.

The College is chiefly indebted for this gift to Mrs. Whitin, who has done so much for us in other ways.

LIBRARY NOTES.

Copies of the Library rules have been mailed this week to all new members of the College and it is hoped that every student will consider it a part of her civic duty to read them, but lest this view of College citizenship may not be universal, it is suggested that self-interest is also in favor of the practice. The Library rules are not all prohibitive, some of them are permissive, and it is often as convenient to know what one may do as to know what one may not do. Many a student has waited more or less resignedly until 9 o'clock on Saturday evening for a reserved book which she might have had at 4 o'clock, and many another has risen early to deliver a book at 8.15 on Monday which was not due until 9 A.M.

Especial attention is asked to two regulations upon which much of the efficiency of the Library depends. The first of these is the rule requiring that books taken from the alcove shelves be replaced by Library attendants. No system has yet been devised by which a large collection of books can be kept in classified order without employing a more or less complicated numbering system, which it requires some experience to use accurately. The danger of misplacements is thus greatly increased in a large collection, while the expense of correcting mistakes is proportionately greater. Accordingly most large libraries in which there is unrestricted access to the shelves have adopted the rule that none but library attendants may replace books on the shelves. The matter is succinctly stated in the placards of a certain well-known library: "A book out of place is a book lost, and a book lost is the same as a book not owned by the library."

The second rule to which attention is asked is the requirement that students return reserved books to the reserved shelves. A little explanation of the Library machinery will make the reason evident. The reserved books are under the charge of a special attendant who inspects the shelves once a day; if during the interval between her visits the books are left on tables, there is a strong probability that they will not be recognized as reserved books by the other attendants, and will be returned to the alcoves to be restored to the reserved shelves only when the next inspection is made. The process is wasteful both for the Library and for the students. "He that is wise may be profitable unto himself." CAROLINE F. PIERCE, Librarian.

Cross Country Club.

The Cross Country Club wishes to invite all students interested in outdoor recreation freed from routine, to come to a meeting in room C, College Hall, at 4.15 Friday, October 27. The aim of the club is to gain as much pleasure as possible from walks in the beautiful country around us. This is attempted by means of three regular one-hour walks each week, combined with occasional longer tramps of the whole club or single divisions of the club. When the season permits, skating, coasting or snow-shoeing may be substituted for walking. It is hoped that there may be a large and enthusiastic membership for 1905-06.

ALUMNÆ NOTES.

Associate Professor Scudder has recently translated and edited selections from the letters of St. Catherine of Siena. Reviews of the book speak most appreciatively of the form in which Miss Scudder presents the facts necessary for understanding the letters, as well as of her choice from the entire correspondence of the letters which would give the clearest impression of the style and personality of their author.

(St. Catherine of Siena as seen in her letters. Translated and Edited with Introduction by Vida D. Scudder. New York, Dutton & Co., London, Dent & Co.)

The Alice Freeman Palmer Fellowship has been awarded to Miss Elizabeth M. Gardiner, Radcliffe, 1901, who last year took work leading to the Master's Degree in the Art Department at Wellesley. Miss Gardiner will spend the year in study abroad. This fellowship is the largest granted to a woman by any institution of learning.

Professor Bates has a short poem, "Above the Battle," in the Independent for October 5.

In the October number of Charities, which is devoted to a discussion of "The Negro in the Cities of the North," Miss Lilian Brandt, 1895, has an article showing from statistics that, considered from any point of view, the negro population of cities is "an abnormally constituted group." Miss Brandt is secretary of the Committee on Social Research of the New York Charity Organization Society and has published several articles on problems met with in social investigation. Her latest work, a monograph on desertion of families, will be reviewed in the near future in the Wellesley Magazine.

Mrs. Annetta Thompson Mills, 1883-84, of Chifu, China, spoke before the Christian Association, October 19, of her work for the Chinese deaf. Mrs. Mills is the first missionary to attempt such work in China; and the school at Chifu, an independent missionary movement, has been established through her personal efforts. Every detail of the difficult task of teaching the deaf and dumb in the Chinese language, has, of necessity, been worked out by Mrs. Mills, and the skill of her pupils in their trades and the respect shown her by the Chinese attest her success.

Miss Minnie Morse, 1891, sailed October 7 for Italy, where she expects to spend the winter in study at the American School of Archæology.

Miss Candace C. Stimson, 1892, is spending the month of October in Wellesley. Miss Stimson, it will be remembered sailed her father's yacht, the Fleur de Lys, in the Dover-Heligoland race in June. The return trip, which was taken after a visit to Kiel for the Regatta week, occupied twenty-five days from Edinburgh to New York. Miss Stimson says of the race that it "was most exciting while it lasted, but fortunately did not last long, though the owners of the Fleur de Lys would have been pleased had it been a few hours shorter."

Miss Bertha Wetherbee, 1899, Miss Lucy Wright, 1900, Miss Louise Allen, 1903, Miss Molly Nye, 1904, and Miss Emma Seward, 1898-1900, have made short visits to Wellesley since the opening of college.

Miss Katharine F. Ball, 1900, is doing work in the University of California.

Nine Wellesley graduates are registered for the A.M. degree at Columbia University, several of whom take work at the Teachers' College. Miss Edith Wilkinson, 1888, has Education for her major subject; Miss Maud E. McClary, 1899, Greek; Miss Udetta D. Brown, 1903, Education and French; Miss Florence Van Wagnan, 1903, and Miss Gladys Gladding, 1904, Education and English; Miss Amy L. Gurlitz, 1905, English Literature and History; Miss Sally A. Reed, 1905, Education and Kindergarten; and Miss Sarah J. Woodward, 1905, Education and Greek. Miss Abbie H. Condit, 1905, is enrolled in the new School of Philanthropy at Columbia. Miss Gladding, Miss McClary, Miss Reed, and Miss Woodward live at Whittier Hall, 1230 Amsterdam Ave, where four other former Wellesley students also have their address,—Mrs. Charlotte Farnsworth, 1887-90, head of Whittier Hall; Miss Sarah J. Freeman, 1886-91, Miss Caroline Newman, 1889-93; and Miss Edith M. Wright, 1901.

Miss Amy Coburn, formerly 1907, is taking work at the Worcester Art Museum School this winter.

The following have accepted positions for 1905-06:

Miss Marion Fitz-Randolph, 1892, is teaching Mathematics at the Merrill-Van Laer School.

Miss Christine Caryl, 1895, is teaching History at Buffalo Seminary. This is the school of which Miss L. Gertrude Angell, 1894, is principal.

Miss May V. Landis, 1904, is teaching Mathematics in St. Helen's Hall, Portland, Oregon.
